‘THIS IS OUR MUSIC’

Meaningfulness in collaborative music practices with elderly people

Karolien Dons

ISME, Glasgow 25.7.2016
What is it about collaborative music practices with elderly people that makes them meaningful to participants?
Being here

I put my arms around my life
embracing it slowly

I am painting a house
I feel the autumn around me

I sit with familiar faces
some smiles some frowns

Somebody's pouring tea into my cup and I can hear people singing
“Don't forget to live”

I put my arms around my life
Slowly embracing it

I can visit the past but I can't live inside it

that's ok -
I can be here right now.
“The performance was very emotional. It is so recognizable. We know what the situation is, but [the musicians] go to such depth with the music. [They] touch all kinds of deeper levels.”

“[T]his is us; this is our music; this is the Odensehuis.”
“I think it made [the process] easier. Because we thought it would be really not done, [but] they said: ‘o this is already really good. If it is getting even better then, wow, great job, but this is already so great.’ [...] [F]or me, it was quite comforting that they already liked it so much and that we could be kind of proud of ourselves with what we’d already achieved.”
“In this project [...] we really know our audience. We know who they are, where they live, what they struggle with.”

“I also wanted to give them something by telling something about myself.”
Meaningfulness

“[I]ndividuals experience a state in which they find security, purpose, worthiness and/or importance through engagement in an activity of everyday life.”
(Craig, 2007 referring to Kielhofner, 1997)
Negotiating meaning

1. Music stands central;

2. Equality, mutuality, reciprocity;

3. Form of interaction is not fixed;

4. Meaningfulness lies in the contact.

Co-creation (Prahalad & Ramaswamy, 2004)